ABSENT-MINDED GEORGE

By M. J. COLLINS

TO say that old George was absent-minded was to put it mildly, he could forget or mislay more things in ten minutes than an ordinary man could in a week.

He operated the corner grocery store and the only reason he made money was because he had a wife with her head in the right place.

The most noticeable thing in the store was a large old-fashioned safe that sat solidly opposite the door. George had bought it when he opened his store more than twenty years ago.

This morning one of his sister-in-law's children had met with an accident and George's wife had to go and help straighten out a very upset household.

"Now, don't go woolgathering!" She warned as she was leaving. "I haven't the slightest idea how long I'll be away but I'll phone and let you know how things are."

Business went on without a hitch and George was well pleased with himself, no muddling for him. Most of his business was on a credit system and this was the day his customers generally cleared up their accounts.

At closing time he had almost a thousand dollars to lock up. Just before he was ready to leave his wife phoned. The accident wasn't as serious as first supposed and she would be home for supper. A short time later George drove home.

While they dined George heard all the details. His wife was so much taken up with what had happened that she forgot to ask how things had gone at the store.

This was the maid's night off and "How much money did we take in today? Did old man Painsy clear up his account?" She asked as he dried the last dish.

"Yes, yes he did. We took in almost a thousand dollars, and I put it away safely." He informed her with some pride.

"Are you positive of that, dear?" She asked pertly.

"Yes, locked tight and safe," he assured her. We put the dish towel

"I'm going to look over the papers and then go to bed, Bertha. I had a busy day at the store." He stifled a yawn.

"Why not take it upstairs and read in bed?" She suggested. "I would be much more restful."

"I think I will. It sounds like a good idea."

"The paper is in the magazine rack. I'll be up in a few minutes. I think I'll bring my knitting."

George awakened with a start. He shook his head trying to get his thoughts straightened out. Evidently, he'd drifted off to sleep while reading. The lights were out and the gentle sound of Bertha's breathing came from the other bed.

The dream! That's what had awakened him. Someone had broken into the store and stolen the safe. Taken it clean away. He chuckled, not much in danger of that, it weighed 700 lbs. Stretching out his full length he relaxed and then rolled over on his side to go to sleep. (The second floor.)

"George, you didn't lock the door!" Bertha cried with vexation. "You got from bad to worse." Opening the door she walked in while George was still fumbling for his keys.

"I locked it, I'm positive." He expostulated, but he had only Bertha's angry back to talk to.

When he closed the door he immediately had a premonition that there was something amiss. Looking at the end of the store he realized what it was, there was only an empty space where the safe had always stood.

"Oh, migosh, Bertha!" George jumped up and down with excitement, waving his arms and shouting. "It's gone, our safe, it's gone."
"Heavens to Betsy!" Bertha cried. "The police. I'll phone the police." And she rushed to the phone.
"What do you know," George shook his head incredulously, after all these years.

About two hours later the police found the safe in a ravine on a side-road about four miles from town. George drove out immediately to see what there was to be done. There was a constable on guard as well as a plain-clothes detective wearing a trench-coat. The safe door was blasted open and it was bare.

"Could you give us a list of the contents?" the detective requested. "It'll help us in our work."

"List!" George looked sheepish. "Well, to tell the truth when I bought the safe twenty years ago I forgot the combination, and the old fellow that sold it to me moved away and I never did get around to getting it. We kept it just for show, officer. Always keep our money in a strong box under the counter."

Says Rheumatic Pain Runs in her Family

But Safeguards Health With Kruschen

Many people seem to think, because a complaint runs in the family, that there is little they can do about it. On the contrary, all the more reason for taking steps to avoid it. Especially if that complaint is rheumatic pain. Read how one woman keeps free from it:—

"Rheumatic pain runs in my family. My father suffered very badly with it. I have been taking Kruschen Salts, and on, for about seven years, a little morning dose, in my first cup of tea. Kruschen is a great help in keeping rheumatic pain out of my shoulders. My general health is very good. I am 57 and can do a day's work with anyone. I would not be without Kruschen."—
(Mrs.) A.B.S.

The whole secret of Kruschen is in its action upon the organs of elimination. Kruschen helps these organs to remove from the body the acid deposits which give rise to rheumatic pain. So try the morning dose of Kruschen for the next month or so. For rheumatic pain, take half to one teaspoonful in hot water first thing in the morning. Two sizes: 25c and 75c at your drug store.

due to go to sleep. The next morning, he remembered that when Bertha phoned, he'd forgotten it and left it sitting on the counter in the cigar box. He picked it up and saw the note. He was throwing aside the covers, he said, on the side of the bed. No sense in sleeping on the floor.

"What's the matter, dear?" She was already awake. "I heard you were turning and about to get up when you were sick." She switched on the bed lamp.

"I've just dreamed I forgot to put the money away." He told her rudely.

"What?" She exclaimed with some asperage. "Will you ever learn?"

"What are you going to do now?"

"I'll go to the bank and have some put it away." While he dressed he told her about the dream. Bertha laughed at him.

"Don't worry," she assured him. "You'll find it there in the very next morning."

In about half an hour he returned. "Everything all right, dear?"

"The saint asleep when I left," she said.

"Yes. I did leave the money sitting on the counter, but it's not there any now. Guess I'll never learn to remember anything." Groggus grumbled and went to bed.

Next morning they were up at the store bright and early. 261 that people were running around in their shirt sleeves and many spent the afternoon tearing down old buildings to make a big fire with that night.

W. F. Durston, who for many years lived in the Queenstown district, but now living in Calgary spent a day or so in town last week looking up his old Gleichen friends. Those he did not manage to see he left word that he hadn't forgotten them. Mr. Durston states he is enjoying very good health and is able to be around the streets every day.

Denny Woods, managing director of the Gleichen Plastic Co. had a birthday Monday and that evening entertained about 20 of his friends to supper. He and a number of his friends are talking about going to Yellowstone—or is it Yellowstone—and looking the country over with a view to starting up some kind of business.

Talk about the war and its casualty list of dead and disabled. It wasn't in it for a moment with the death and destruction of the motor car. From every part of the country come daily casualty lists till one is almost loath to take up the daily newspapers. A distressing feature of the situation is the fact that not only able bodied men are the victims as in the case of war but women and children are killed and maimed by the modern moloch. There seems no remedy for the situation, little or no regard being paid to precautionary measures in a case of "family" breeds contempt. Everybody has a machine of some kind and to be in the swim you must go in it and hang the risk.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM NOTES

Many insects can see in several directions at the same time and they make good use of this faculty in hunting for food, and protecting themselves from their enemies. A little effort a farmer can look about him at the same time. Now what the harvest is over farmers will be looking ahead to next year's plans. Looking backwards he will remember that if there were too many lads this spring when the air was laden with drifting soil. Most of this dust came from land in fallow and there fore it is evident that a decrease in the fallow acreage will reduce the soil drifting hazard. Can we expect the same returns with less summerfallow?

The value of summer fallow is well established and the growing of grain on fallow only, will likely continue as the most widely used practice. In such localities it is necessary to have every precaution to protect fallows from drifting, top farming, trash cover lumpy surface and listing to prevent soil drifting are new well appreciated by farmers.

In areas of more favorable rainfall, those west and north of the so called dry bowl it appears practical to reduce the fallow acreage. Records at the Lethbridge Experimental Station show that over a period of 35 years the returns in yield per acre have been involved with a rotation of fallow-wheat-wheat namely 13.4 bushels per acre. In districts where rainfall is heavier than at Lethbridge the yield can be expected to favor the three year rotation. With the three year rotation only one third of the land is in fallow as compared with one half for the two year rotation.

All along the foot hills cover crops are now needed on fallows. The pasturing value of cover crops has become very well known but cover crops were originally used to prevent soil drifting and their value from this point of view should always be kept in mind.

The reduction of fallow acreage is of definite importance in soil conservation. It means that each farmer will have to study conditions as he finds them including soil, moisture, insect pests, plant diseases etc., and plan his farming practices accordingly. In many districts an increase in livestock is justified and this would necessitate more land in hay and pasture.

Soil conservation is of first importance. Depletion of good farmland by wind and water erosion must cease and it is obvious that one of the factors that is going to play an important part in this development will be the reduction of the summer fallow acreage.
